The story in short:
 After working hard,
 chopping wood,
 the boys are having a drink.
 The girls are not happy about it, as they have to do the cleaning.
 Hans wants to join his mates, but instead is asked by his wife to help

HAMMERSCHLAGEN

The first player to pound their nail in wins. The nail must be flush with or below the surface of the wood.

WERNER

Round 1 - 16 participants
 Round 2 - 8 participants
 Round 3 - 4 participants
 Round 4 - 2 participants
 And the winner is Werner!
 Congratulations!!!
 Well done!

Hammerschlagen is a German game reportedly dating from 1940, in which several contestants try to hammer a nail into a wooden beam.

Masskrugstemmen!

IT LOOKS PRETTY EASY!

Filled almost to the rim with water!

"Masskrug" translates to one-liter stein of beer and "stemmen" translates to lift. Masskrugstemmen is a Bavarian feat of strength where contestants hold a one-liter beer stein with one arm, out in front of them and parallel to the floor, for as long as they can.

WE HAVE A WINNER

GETTING HARDER ...

ONE MORE DOWN

ANOTHER ONE BITES THE DUST!

Congratulations Ron!

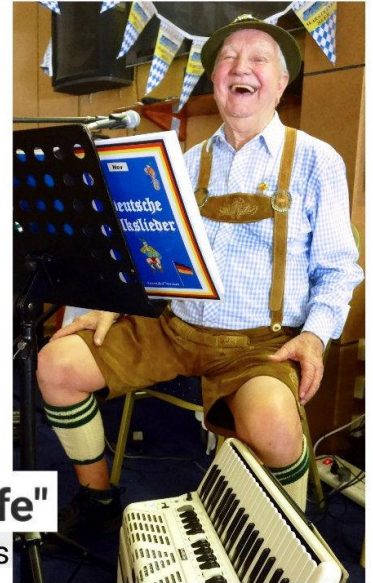

Loferls are a must for trendy men

If you think loferls can be compared with normal socks then you clearly haven't understood Oktoberfest and traditional Bavarian costume. Loferls are 'calf warmers', they're not worn on the feet, but on the lower leg only, giving them an unrivalled look. In Bavaria, they are a must with short lederhosen.

Bavarian calf socks

calf warmers

History of Loferl

To begin with, Loferl is a Bavarian term for Stutzen (calf-coverings). Basically, they really ARE calf-warmers! But... why? Well, legend has it that many years ago, the Landvolk (country folk) worked barefoot, and in order to cover their exposed legs and keep them from getting too cold, they wore Loferl.

"Wadlstruempfe" half stockings

With this beard Petr just needs the right outfit like a Lederhosen and a hat and he will look like a real BAVARIAN man (a BAYER)!
